In this course you will investigate some of the things that linguistic theory has to say about language disorders and some of the ways that language disorders can guide us in the development of linguistic theory. Disorders such as aphasia, autism, William Syndrome, and dyslexia will be discussed. Our emphasis will be the implications of these conditions for theories of language and theories of mind.

Prerequisite, Linguistics 101 or permission of instructor